

Waterbury and New Canaan Branch Lines Needs and Feasibility Study

PUBLIC INFORMATION MEETINGS

The Connecticut Department of Transportation is conducting a study of two branches of the New Haven Line, the Waterbury and New Canaan Branch Lines. This study will identify current needs, evaluate alternatives for improving service and enhancing transit opportunities, and ultimately recommend improvements for both rail corridors.

A series of public information meetings are being held to present and discuss the study status, and review the draft recommendations for the two branch lines.

Your input is important!

Area residents, business owners, commuters, and all interested stakeholders are encouraged to attend these meetings and share your views about the preliminary recommendations for these two rail corridors.
