History of Grant making in Derby

Derby historically, with the exception of Police, Fire and Education has not applied competitively for grants in recent years. Most of the City of Derby's funding has been through earmarked appropriations, formula based grants and state bond funds. The City of Derby never had a formal grant's office, nor any one individual specifically devoted to securing funding. Derby has relied on discretionary funding to help meet its needs.

Recently, non-competitive or discretionary money (money given by the state and federal delegations without the City applying for it in a formal way) has been much more difficult to secure. In an effort to do away with "pork-barrel" grants, the federal government has tightened up its process. Consequently, for a City the size of Derby, it will be much more difficult to get discretionary funding as a lone applicant, i.e., Derby has more of an opportunity asking for funding on a regional level or in collaboration with other lower valley towns and cities. Additionally, the federal government has done more in the way of trying to make non-competitive grants, competitive. Forms now need to be filled out and submitted (in the past a letter would suffice). On the State side of things, what has always been a formula based grant to the City of Derby, the Small Cities Block Grant, is now competitive. It will require Derby to compete with like-sized municipalities rather than rely on the traditional lump sum (anywhere from $400,000 to $750,000).

Part of the role of Grants Administrator is to oversee projects for funding that has been acquired. Additionally, there have been errors made in years past that require working with various state and federal agencies to ensure that the City of Derby is correctly administering funding to avoid disruption of future grant opportunities.
